Fruit-geddon

Issue 26 August 15, 2021

Good afternoon all! I apologize for the late post, it's been a very busy weekend!

This week was a chaotic ride of ups and downs but we've come up stronger than before. With the heatwave slamming the Pacific Northwest, we've watched our fruit trees put their fruit on full blast. They've dropped so many that we've ended up with pounds of nectarines! We've even got peaches coming soon. It's honestly been a tease to watch them grow. I've been salivating until they were finally ripe for the picking. Fresh fruit is such an experience that it's certainly worth the wait! You can smell the perfume coming off them feet away.

We're going to have a lot of cooking and canning in our future. While we get that done, we're suring up the plant bed fencing because of a few grazers sampling our growth. We'd rather not have to contend with weather conditions plus animals before we can gather what has survived growing. It is a bit amusing to see so many bare buckwheat tops yet disappointing for the beans. Not all were eaten thankfully since a few sprouts remained at the end.

Our adventure continues with countless lessons we learn since we're so new to this. But with each one we pick up, we get a little stronger, a little more bountiful. The addition of creativity and skill is a powerhouse combo that we strive for constantly at our farm. Watch closely for our next drops coming up in this exciting time for 3 Visions Farm!

As always, thank you for reading!
