A Lesson in Netting

Issue 27 August 21, 2021

Hello everyone!

For those who read the newsletter last week, you might remember our earlier struggles with our plants being nibbled. We've come a good way since then and scoured the markets for netting. It really seems to be working! For instance, have a look at this beautiful bunch of blue lake beans we've harvested! We'll be eating them tonight cooked alongside the cherry and sungold tomatoes that turned. It'll be one flavorful side dish, that's for sure!

Now that our things are properly protected, we were finally able to pick the gem of our first black karim. It's massive. We're guessing that it could be over a pound after all was said and done. Check out our short videos below to see for yourself! When the other tomatoes begin to turn, we'll certainly be canning them as well since we've been fairly busy with the fruits. It'll be worth the wait come winter to crack them open!

There will be more videos to come soon so stay tuned for our next updates!
