My Grandparents knew....

...things that I thought were amazing. They could make tools, repair and repurpose in clever ways. This quiet kid knew that staying observant meant that I could bear witness to their country magic. Raw ingredients made it to the table steaming and flavorful but I got to watch my grandma transform the flour into bread and the pile of fresh garden goodies into the simple, sustaining treasures I still crave when I need a touch of home. If I leaned quietly against the outside corner of the house, I might get a view of my grandpa as he cut neck off a glass pop bottle. He'd silently sand the sharp edge to make himself a fresh slide for his guitar.

From early on, I wanted to know how things worked. That hunger has brought me a wide and extensive skill set. The current crises of health and food security amplify a great overarching need. We need the opportunity to relearn basic self sufficiency, STAT, the way our families once did.

The plan for phase 1 of 3 Visions Farm is simple. Prepare two high tunnels for extended season growth and begin accepting 2 or more farmers to lease an acre each for their own farming.
