*These three hymns had their tunes composed by John B. Dykes. Dykes was born in 1823 in Kingston upon Hull (or just “Hull”), a seafaring region of Yorkshire for over 800 years, facing the North Sea. His father was a partner in a shipbuilding business. Young John (the fifth child and third boy) took an interest in music and was taking piano and violin lessons. He became an apprentice church organist at age 10 of St John’s in Hull under the tutelage of his uncle; this is the same church that his grandfather had built as was now the vicar. John began university studies at Cambridge in 1843. He was ordained in the Church of England in 1847 and, in addition to being parish priest, became choir director and precentor (liturgical worship leader) at Durham Cathedral. He wrote at least 300 hymns, many of which are considered fine examples of Victorian hymnody.
