Protecting Yourself Against Romance Scams
A Case Study & Resources

Romance scams are designed to pull at your heartstrings and the consequences of these scams are often financially and emotionally devastating to victims.

These scams occur when a criminal adopts a fake online identity to gain a victim's affection and trust, and then uses the illusion of a romantic relationship to manipulate or steal from the victim.

The criminals who carry out romance scams are experts at what they do and will seem genuine, caring, and believable.

Please join us and our partners from the FBI's Washington Field Office, the Internet Crime Complaint Center (IC3), and Advocating Against Romance Scammers to hear the most recent statistics about romance scams, listen to a compelling case presentation, and learn about resources available to avoid these scams or help you in the event you fall victim to them.
