This contractual authority cannot be extended to the home of a third party where the principal does not reside. The surety must have the consent of the homeowner to enter the premises. As the right of entry is by contract, a principal has no authority to authorize the surety to enter the residence of a third party.