INTERVIEW WITH CHEF CHRIS.

FROM LIMPOPO TO GLOBAL KITCHENS

Inspired by his grandfather, who encouraged him to pursue hospitality management, Chef Chris Sebola's journey began in earnest after high school. He excelled academically, earning a diploma from the American Hospitality Academy and gaining diverse culinary experiences across the United States.

Despite initial challenges, Chef Sebola embraced new ingredients and cooking styles, enriching his knowledge and bringing a global perspective to his dishes. His achievements include being featured in "The Great South African Cookbook" and winning multiple prestigious culinary awards.

Passionate about giving back, Chef Sebola plans to open a culinary studio in Limpopo to train and inspire the next generation of chefs, embodying the spirit of Ubuntu in his work and community.

How has your time overseas influenced your cooking style?

"My time overseas played a significant role in changing and empowering my cooking skills and knowledge. I can now cook different types of cuisine. I enjoy Cuban food, Asian food (especially their traditional fish stew), and Mexican food. I have mastered Italian pasta, though I don't enjoy their chicken, but cooking it is one of my favourite tasks."

Are there any specific cuisines or techniques you encountered abroad that you've incorporated into your dishes?

"I am now working on a plan to have my own studio to train and educate people of Limpopo in different types of cuisine and techniques. It's a surprise, but I'm happy to share and reveal some of the plan in due time."
