Arms of different branches of the O'Donnells of Tyrconnell

Table of illustrations

Common form of O'Donnell Arms, used by the O'Donnell Clan Association, et al.; once attributed to O'Donnells of Glenarm, Antrim (extinct), however, their tomb indicates a crosscrosslet fitchée, the original form.

O'Donnell of Tyrconnell Tabard Arms of Rory O'Donnell, 1st Earl of Tyrconnell (Source: G.O. Ms. 34)

Arms of Rory O'Donnell, 1st Earl of Tyrconnell, in a Jacobite genealogy (Athlone Herald, St. Germain-en-Laye)

O'Donnell of Newport
Arms of the O'Donnell Baronets

O'Donnell of Spain
Arms of the Duke of Tetuan
The basic escutcheon, per saltire or and gules, also applied to Larkfield, Castlebar, and Austrian branches

O'Donell of Austria
Arms of Count O'Donell von Tyrconnell

Episcopal Arms
Arms of Cardinal Patrick O'Donnell of Glenties (sinister half using the original arms with cross-crosslet fitchée as registered for Sir Hugh Dubh 23rd O'Donnell in 1567)

O'Donnell of France O'Donnell Counts in France (Source: Armorial of Rietstap & Rolland)

O'Donnell of Ardfert (Sources: G.O. Vol. Z, Folio 87; & Vol. Aa, Folio 72)

The Motto is in all cases, In Hoc Signo Vinces, and relates to the affirmation of the Cross, in every case. The Arms derive from those legendarily bestowed in the 5th century on Conall, progenitor of the Cenel Conaill and son of the High-King Niall of the Nine Hostages. According to the Life and Acts of Saint Patrick by Jocelyn of Furness (c. 1185 AD), St. Patrick took his staff, Bacall Iosa, and struck the shield of Conall, rendering a sign of the Cross on it, saying those who would bear it would be victorious, and that many saints and nations would proceed from him. For those accorded the full heraldic achievement (i.e. presently only those of Ardfert, Austria, and Spain), the customary O'Donnell supporters are a bull and lion rampant, dexter or sinister, and either azure or gold.