ANTELOPE CANYON

Within the Navajo Nation near the city of Page in northern Arizona lies a sacred place of astounding beauty called Antelope Canyon. The Navajo believe that this area was named for the abundance of antelope that once roamed free here. Now it is these stunningly unique slot canyons that attract people from all around the world. These canyons have formed by the gradual wearing away of the varying shades of Terra Cotta Navajo Sandstone during periods of flash floods. Over generations, the passageways have slowly opened and morphed into extraordinary hardened flowing shapes. Seeping and draining from miles around Antelope Canyon, rain rushes through the labyrinth of underground tunnels scrubbing away sand in its path. The resulting openings have become some of the most photographed slot canyons in the world where light plays with the mind-boggling shapes of streaked Navajo Sandstone in its manifold warm earth tones.
