May is here, and I'm so happy the warmer weather has finally settled in even with a few chilly mornings here and there, I'm not complaining.

The past couple of weeks have been a little hectic. Between college tours, spring break, and both my husband and daughter getting sick, my writing definitely took a bit of a backseat. I just couldn't fully focus on finishing this last stretch of my work in progress. But I'm back at it now, staying consistent, and my goal is to have it done before Memorial Day.

After that, I'll be heading into the editing phase, and honestly, I'm in no rush. I'm really just enjoying the process this time around and giving myself grace when life gets busy or things don't go exactly as planned. I know some writers take retreats to fully lock in maybe that's something I'll try next time but for now, I'm okay with the pace I'm at.

On a fun note, my father-in-law built me a custom bookshelf for my office, and I am obsessed. It's absolutely gorgeous and makes my writing space feel even more special.

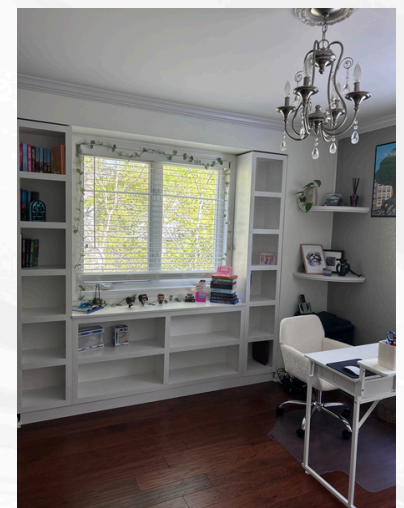

Also, my daughter (future marketing major 🙄) has been running my social media, and she's honestly doing such a great job. If you're not already following me on TikTok @._lutheauthor or Instagram @lutheauthor you should! Just know... I don't love being on camera, so anytime you see me in a video, please understand I was probably slightly stressed about it 😅.
