THE JOHN & HEIDI SHOW PRESENT:

Did you hear about this?

A NEWS HEADLINE: From Somewhere in This World.

A guy in China desperate to charge his phone ended up disrupting traffic after he plugged his mobile into a traffic light. Officers found the man had opened the switch box and unplugged the controller in order to charge his phone.

WEIRD NEWS: Brought to you by WeirdGiftOfTheDay.com.

A man who was notorious for stealing women's underwear during a series of home burglaries in the Inland Empire was freed from prison, then arrested on suspicion of committing similar crimes. 32-year-old Diego Aguirre was arrested on January 28 on suspicion of residential burglary in Fontana and violating parole. Aguirre is also suspected of committing recent burglaries. Aguirre was known to steal women's underwear as well as other personal items, the Sheriff's Department said. Chino Hills experienced about 20 residential burglaries with significant similarities. An investigation led to the arrest of Aguirre after he was found to have committed burglaries.

MOMENT OF DUH: Brought to you by RedCrossBlood.org.

A man who allegedly impersonated a police officer in Las Vegas was arrested after pulling over a real cop in an unmarked vehicle. An on-duty Vegas officer in a plain patrol car busted 29-year-old Pedro Franco one day after he allegedly pulled over a driver near Sunset Road. The driver told cops a suspect in a Hyundai pulled him over but then drove off. The motorist then followed the compact SUV and took down its license plate before relaying the incident to police. Franco then tried the same scheme the following morning, but this time picked the officer as his potential victim. Franco was busted on one count of impersonating a public official and attempted impersonation of a police officer.

“I've got something to say...”

By Chris Whiting

Go Fish can get pretty intense. And an intense game of Go Fish taught me a valuable life lesson at five years old. Well, actually my Grandmother taught me the life lesson, Go Fish was the curriculum, and her kitchen table was the classroom. I was learning to play games with her at the kitchen table, sort of a rite of passage as a grandkid in our family, and I had lost. I began to cry and tell her it wasn't fair and that I wanted to win. She calmly told me that if I was only going to be happy when I won, I was going to spend a lot of time unhappy, so I better learn to really enjoy playing the game. I'll never forget that, and many other things I learned at Grandmother's unassuming green kitchen table.

Even when family meals weren't being served, odds were you could find Grandmother sitting at the table working on a crossword puzzle or writing a poem. I was fortunate to have all four of my grandparents alive and functioning until into my thirties. This gave me the opportunity to get to know them both as a child and as an adult. I was close to all of them, but probably the closest to Grandmother. We started playing games and baking cakes together. Later, when I was in college, she would write me a letter, every week for five years on that same kitchen table. She'd always tell me what the weather was like, what the neighbors were up to, Grandpa's latest exploits, and the latest gossip and goings ons from church. I looked forward to those letters every week, and still have them. After I got married, my first house was a block behind Grandmother and Grandpa. Grandmother talked to the neighbor behind her, and across the street from me, to get permission for me to walk through their yard for me to visit. And visit I would, nearly every Friday night, to hang out at the kitchen table and play Heck, a card game that was really called, “Oh, Hell” but Grandmother didn't subscribe to such language. (Continued Next Week)
