About Richard Mensah Sokpor
He was born in the city of Accra in the African country of Ghana. Richard's earliest memories were a house that was full of music and dancing. People were always getting together and learning new dances. At a young age Richard joined the National Dance Company in Ghana and toured the world often performing for foreign dignitaries, such as President Bill Clinton. During his 12 years with the National Dance Company, he taught dance classes and workshops. He developed and choreographed dances based off of traditional Ghanaian dance. During his tenure, he learned all the different drumming styles and individual drums/percussion parts to all the Ghanaian dances. Later, he joined, "Noyan" Contemporary Dance School where he studied and continued his teaching of African dance. He also continued developing the styles of, hip-hop, modern dance, break dance, and free style dance. While living in Portland Oregon, Richard has been working with his great uncle, Obbo Addy teaching dance workshops and summer camps for the schools. He continues to tour with the Obbo's group while teaching dance and drumming.
