

Otium Beta Terms of Use

Effective July 4 2025

Thank you for exploring the beta version of Otium ("the Beta"). This is an early-access version of our platform designed to test core functionality and gather feedback before full public launch.

By accessing or using the Beta, you agree to the following terms:

1. Beta Status

This version of Otium is still under active development. It may contain bugs, incomplete features, or visual inconsistencies. We welcome your use, but please understand this is not the final product.

2. Public Availability

The Beta is publicly accessible, and you are welcome to share the link with others. However, please note that this is not the officially launched version of Otium and may change significantly before release.

3. Feedback

We are actively collecting feedback to improve the platform. You may be invited to submit your thoughts via forms, surveys or email. By providing feedback, you grant us the right to use, adapt, and incorporate it into the product without restriction.

4. Ownership and IP

All content, data, designs, and feedback submitted through the Beta are the sole property of Otium. You agree not to reverse engineer, replicate, or reuse any part of the platform.

5. Performance and Availability

We may update, modify or remove access to the Beta at any time without notice. There is no guarantee of uptime, support, or data retention during the beta period.

6. Privacy

Your use of the Beta is also subject to our Privacy Policy, which outlines how we handle any information collected through the platform.

7. No Warranty

The Beta is provided “as is” with no warranties of any kind. Use is at your own risk.

Thank you for helping us shape the future of Otium. We appreciate your curiosity, creativity and feedback!