REMEBERING THE GENERAL SLOCUM DISASTER

By Joanne Goodfellow

It was June 15, 1994. We arrived at the Maritime Industry Museum, which is located on the campus of SUNY Maritime College at Fort Schuyler, New York.

A colleague of mine, Frank Duffy, had invited my husband and I to a small reception. It was to memorialize the 90th anniversary of the burning of the General Slocum, an excursion steamboat.

At the reception we were introduced to Claude Rust, the author of The Burning of the General Slocum. We were also introduced to one of the survivors of the disaster, Adele Martha Liebenow Wotherspoon, the youngest survivor of the fire. She was a baby when the disaster occurred. She was 90 when I met her.

The General Slocum was named after a Union Army Commander at Gettysburg, Major General Henry Warner Slocum. It was owned by the Knickerbocker Company and had passed its safety inspection on May 5, 1904, a month before the tragic excursion.

The steamer had been chartered by St. Marks Evangelical Lutheran Church, located in Manhattan. They were having their 17th Annual Picnic. The mood was festive. The date was June 15, 1904

It is unknown exactly how many people were aboard the Slocum that day. The best estimate was 1,331 including crew members.

At 9:40am the lines were cast off and the adventure was about to begin. It was an adventure that would end in dire tragedy. 40 minutes later fire ravaged the deck of the Slocum. 1,021 souls perished. Rotted life preservers, lifeboats unable to be launched, unusable fire hoses, and other faulty safety equipment added to the death toll.

One of the survivors of that terrible fire aboard the General Slocum was a teenage boy named Bill Zipse. The next day he found a Slocum transportation token in his pants pocket. He carried it with him his whole life as a good luck charm. Today there are only two known to exist. The Zipse family has donated theirs to the Mariners Museum and Park in Newport News, Virginia.

In 2004 I received a package in the mail from my friend Frank Duffy. It contained a replica of the token Bill Zipse found in his pocket. The obverse replicates the original token and the reverse indicates the centennial of the disaster along with the name of the Maritime Industry Museum and the date of the tragedy.

I have the book by Claude Rust, whose grandmother died in that terrible disaster, and this wonderful token, memorializing those who paved the way for strict safety standards aboard all inland waterway vessels.

Special thanks to Francis J. Duffy, my good friend and the former Executive Director of the Maritime Industry Museum. He is no longer with us, but he was a strong advocate for the history and safety of New York Harbor.

Yes, Sir. Terrible affair that General Slocum explosion. Terrible, terrible! A thousand casualties. And heart rending scenes. Men trampling down women and children. Most brutal thing. What do they say was the cause? Spontaneous combustion: most scandalous revelation. Not a single lifeboat would float and the firehose all burst. What I can't understand is how the inspectors ever allowed a boat like that ... Now you are talking straight, Mr. Crimmins. You know why? Palmoil. Is that a fact? Without a doubt ...

Graft, my dear sir. Well, of course, where there's money going there's always someone to pick it up.

COLONIAL COINAGE WITH FLOWING HAIR? By Fred Garvin

Early Settlers of the American Colonies brought with them coins from Europe, but the coins quickly went back to pay for supplies. Colonists bartered with Wampum, Tobacco and also nails. Colonial exports were usually paid for with needed English goods. Due to trade with The West Indies (The Caribbean) Spanish, Portuguese, and French coins appeared in the Colonies. Throughout the 17th & 18th Centuries the Spanish Dollar was the first International Currency. It had a consistent silver content and milling characteristics. It was actually cut into eight pieces, or bits giving birth to the term "Pieces of Eight" as well as "2 bits". England did not supply its colonies with sufficient coinage and prohibited them from making their own, however, this edict was to be challenged.

It was the 19th of October, 1652 when the Massachusetts General Court decreed "For the prevention of clipping of all such pieces of money as shall be coined with-in this jurisdiction, it is ordered by this Courte and the authorite thereof, that henceforth all pieces of money coined shall have a double ring on either side with this inscription, MASSACHUSETTS, and a Tree in the center on one side, and NEW ENGLAND and the yeare of Our Lord on the other side." The Massachusetts Colony struck a series of coins known as the TREE Pieces. The Willow, Oak, and Pine Tree Shilling. They were all dated 1652 even though they were produced for many years, this way if England found out, they could claim one production year. Capt. John Hull and Robert Sanderson began striking these coins in the 1670's, 3 Pence, 6 Pence, and a 12 Pence or Shilling at their Massachusetts mint. It wasn't until 1684 when the British Crown revoked the Charter of Massachusetts and closed the mint, however, in 1690 the King allowed "Bills of Credit" to be printed in the colony as payment to recruited troops in Massachusetts.

Maryland was another colony that tested the crown by minting coins. Cecil Calvert, the 2nd Lord Baltimore, became heir in 1632 to a massive estate called The Maryland Estate and is believed to be named after Queen Henrietta Maria wife of King Charles who signed the 1632 charter establishing the Maryland Colony. Cecil believed the Charter permitted him to strike coins and wanted to be one of the first to create his own coinage for use in the New World. It was either 1658 or 1659 Lord Baltimore ordered a copper penny (denarium), a silver 4 pence (groat), 6 pence, and 12 pence or Shilling from the Royal Mint in London. Calvert expected these coins would circulate throughout the colonies and ultimately become the preferred medium of exchange. The coins were designed by Nicholas Briot, and have never seeing a "Flowing Hair" dollar or half dollar, Briot created an impressive left facing portrait of Cecil with a mane that rivals the two year U.S. Minted examples designed by Chief Engraver Robert Scott. Personally, I strongly feel Mr. Scott was very familiar with the Lord Baltimore Coinage and most likely held some in a collection. All of these coins were struck in 1659 but none bear a date. The sample coins were sent to Phillip Calvert, Cecil's brother, who served as the Secretary for the Maryland Colony. Once the coins were issued in 1660, Lord Baltimore was ordered arrested and all the coins were confiscated. No record of the proceedings against Calvert have been recovered, however he must have prevailed to some degree due to the coins existence otherwise they would have been destroyed. This is a position held by historians on the subject.

The Flowing Hair Dollar holds historical significance as the first dollar coin struck by the United States, with the first minting on 15 October 1794. I used to think the Federal Financial Year beginning in October had something to do with it being 6 months away from Tax Day, but maybe its reasoning is based on the minting of this Dollar Coin?!

Some of you may already know that The United States Mint will be releasing a 2024 Flowing Hair Silver Medal and Gold Coin marking the 230th Anniversary. These will be released in the Fall of 2024. My guess is in October. From what I understand the design will be recreated from the mint's portfolio of historic coins, although the date spacing on obverse and lettering on reverse will be aligned with modern technology, and will feature the incused edge on the Gold Coin. We don't know any other details like prices and proofs, so come October 2024, who will be the first to bring one to the meeting?
