Hi All

Well disclosure is really moving ahead today in the US congress:

UFO hearing key takeaways: What a whistleblower told Congress about UAP cbsnews.com

One of the whistleblower directly talks about reversed engineered UFO's and biological material (ie alien bodies). However his testimony is secondhand but his credentials and background have been checked out by many. He has received personal threats. So why is he willing to come forward? One reason is that once you do go public in a big way there is so much attention paid to you that you get some degree of "protection" by your visibility.

This is the tip of the iceberg. However, with respect to the two whistleblowers that I have sent you already I think we are still a long way from hearing them testify in public. They have testified to congressional staff in private but their stories are too explosive (you could say outrageous) for the public yet. I think that once there is other supporting testimony and other direct evidence then the information will get out in some other more comprehensive way - maybe along the lines of a well thought out "public confession" of how this has happened.

Here are other thoughts about whistleblower testimony:

Other than direct physical contact and examination of alien and man made craft, and alien bodies the best evidence will be obtained from credible whistleblowers and other witnesses who corroborate in multiple ways the key facts.

Any individual whistleblower can be totally wrong either on purpose, misunderstanding what they saw/heard, or because they are mentally ill or delusional. That is why we will need to see many credible witnesses that are essentially saying the same thing.

So far I have linked you to two armed forces whistleblowers who could both be suffering from PTSD and delusional thoughts. You could easily reach the conclusion that both of these men are in that category. However parts of their testimony are very compelling. I won't say they are telling the truth until I hear more from other witnesses, but it is tantalizing.

Now as part of my promise to educate on the UFO/alien topic I am going to talk about why I

Now as part of my promise to educate on the ET Graham topic I am going to talk about why I think that aliens must exist:

We have all heard the analogy that there are more stars in the universe than the grains of sand in beaches around the world. In fact, even more stars than sand grains. In fact there are 100 to a trillion billion stars in the Milky Way and there are 100 to a trillion billion galaxies - so 100 billion trillion x 100 billion trillion is a number that can't be comprehended. Some of these stars have been around for almost 14 billion years. We are now discovering planets around most stars that we can look at now - some in goldilocks zone where water can exist. More planets are being discovered literally every day now.

So I believe that it is absolutely impossible that no intelligent life exists in the rest of the universe. Not to mention many theories that are emerging about parallel universes (the multiverse) including an infinite number of universes. More on this in a future note about what string theory is telling us.

So if some intelligent life developed on a planet around a star, say, 10 billion years ago, how advanced might they be? Human beings may have been around for a million years on earth with amazing developments in our understanding of science and development of technology in recent centuries. But we actually know very little about the universe. For example, using Einstein's famous $E=mc^2$ equation, we know that 4% of our universe is visible matter, 27% is dark matter which we don't know what it is made of but we do know where it is (guess what - it is passing through your body right now), and the rest of 69% is dark energy and we have no clue what it is but do know that it has an anti-gravity effect that is causing the universe to be expanding at ever increasing speeds. So we only know 4% of our universe very well! That is pretty pathetic on a cosmic scale. What if our 10 billion year old alien friends know what the 100% is and can tap into all the energy including the 69% representing dark energy. Now multiply this by the number of alien races who have been around for billions of years and you can see the potential.

You may think, OK they probably exist, but if they are billions of light years away then they couldn't possibly have come to visit us - no way. I disagree and will address that question later.

Stay tuned for the next update which I propose to do weekly, subject to breaking news, such as what happened today.

Again, if you don't want this stuff you can just say so. I won't be offended because I know that I am crazy!

Alan
