

A pack of about 21 assembled in the Clarence Road carpark and as there was no beer in the carpark attention was focused on the marvellous murals on the surrounding buildings and the rising of the supermoon. Before the off the hare warned that there would be a section of trail without markings but didn't say why.

The trail zigzagged down to the seafront golden mile all laid in chalk, so no worried locals. The trail disappeared as we approached the bridge under the pier the hare then disclosed that it was because the lifeboat was returning and crossing our trail, (feeble excuse.) The trail carried on along the seafront to eventually turn up the cliffs via a steep stairway to the top, then half way down again to the beerstop. Plenty of beer, sweets and even seating in a shelter overlooking the estuary. The trail then made its way back to the carpark through the cliff top estates.

The pack then reassembled in Wetherspoons Last Post. A very large pub with a good selection of very cheap beer. The food was good, including chips, garlic bread, onion rings. The RA decided not to hold a circle just to hand out half dozen beers to various miscreants without any explanation.

Well done Sludge, well laid trail and good pub.

On On

Lunchbox