The Tail of the Tailypo

Reimagined by Sharon Dean

Long, long, long ago in some backwoods not far from here, lived an old man and his three dogs named: I Know, You Know, and Calico. The winter that year was very long, dark, and cold and food was scare. So, the old man grabbed his ax and three dogs and he headed out into the woods to see what they could scare up for supper. All day they searched the forest and didn't see a thing. Then, just as the sun was sinking low, I Know, You Know and Calico caught the scent of a TailyPo! They chased it up and down and all around! And, just as it past the old man he chopped off its tail with a single swift CHOP! The TailyPo let out a Terrible YOooo and ran away into the darkness. So, I Know, You Know, and Calico and the old man went home and cooked up that TailyPo tail in a pot. It was way too long, stringy, chewy, and stinky for the old man to eat, so he threw it to the dogs and went to sleep. Later that night, there came a-scratching at the door and in a low growling voice they heard "TailyPo, TailyPo, I want my TailyPo!" The old man could hear the dogs barking into the distance. Not long after, only two dogs returned, You Know and Calico. I Know was never heard of again...

To hear the rest of the tail be sure to visit the Y-City Cryptid Festival at Zanes Landing Park on Saturday, October 14. Craft vendors, food trucks, beer garden and more!
