Trials of the Trail

Lewis and Clark and their men had seen large grizzly bears as they traveled through the West. They were thankful they had their weapons with them. But meeting the grizzlies was not the hardest part of the journey. It was also hard to cross the Rocky Mountains. It took the explorers and their party a month to make this part of their trip. The friendly Shoshone tribe was very helpful in telling them how they could cross the mountains.

There were many reasons why this part of the trip was difficult. The steep, narrow pathways sometimes caused the horses to fall over the cliffs to their deaths. Many times the men had to lead the horses. There were also fewer wild animals for the men to hunt for food.

Directions: Answer these questions about the hardships of the expedition.

1. What was the hardest part of the trip? steep narrow pathways
2. Lewis and Clark got help from which friendly Native American tribe? Shoshone tribe
3. What word in the story means "a group of people traveling together"? party
4. What caused some of the horses to fall to their deaths? see #1
